PORTLAND, MONDAY, NOV. 29, 1886. A TOPIC OF THE TIME AND OF ALL TIMES,

The idea or principle set forth in the term. "Survival of the Fittest," has been called the Darwinian law. It is not asserted, indeed, that Darwin was the discoverer, or even that the phrase was first used by him. But he did more than any other thinker and writer to develop the City that had defied successfully Napoleon Bossparte, and an allied army defeated Ibrablim Pastia and disployuessed Meham-med All of his Syrian conquest. Mohammed All was an able and enlightoned ruler, bles; and the terms and illustrations employed mainly his own, and probably never will be

But the Darwinian law exerts its full force taly under strict conditions of nature. It is limited by the growth of human intelligence, by the extension of human activities, and above all he entargement of the moral nature of man.
"Survival of the fitteet," as applied to buman beings, is a doctrine or principle that exerts its full force only among men in the savage state. As divilization advances and the llumanities derelian society takes care that many who are no filtiest who are furthest indeed from compart son with the fifted, shall survive. Hence our astlums, hospitais, charities and all the multi-farious means and methods which organized socleix and government employ for taking care of the weak and defective members of the com-

In the animal and vegetable kingdoms like- ment of the Eastern question. By it she dewise the agency of civilized man defeats or re-verses the Darwinian law. Man destroys the animals fittest to sorvice in the state of nature and introduces animals which are useful to himself, but which can only be protected and supported by his constant care. He extirpates also and utterly destroys the trees and plants of a region which have survived because they were littest, and introduces other trees and plants which are useful to him, but which could not hold their ground against "the fittest" for exama brief period without his assiduous labor and appreniating protection.

But the Darwinian law, though modified, checked and even reversed to an extent by growth of humanities among civilized men, ret holds its evay with cruel rigor over a large part of our species, because it is not resisted with an intelligent and consistent purpose. For though partial victories are gained through growth of human intelligence and morals over the Dar-winian law, that law reneives powerful support through a kindred law, upon which human in-telligence and sense of responsibility holds too little check:—we mean the law commonly known as the law of Malthus—the law under widch normation tends constantly to increase beyond the means of subsistence. To this law the cherks are vice, misary and modal restraint; and if the last be not effectively employed, the others will surely do their work. The Malthusian law can be diseated, and some few do illusian law can be a seaso, and some new to defect it, but the tendency on the part of greater number is to increase their families, as The Organization which its good friend, the Catholic priest of East Portland, made objection, beyond all means of support of the contract of the cont port that can resection, event in unasted any port that can resectionly be expected. No matter, then, how much wealth there may be in the world, or what theories may be advanced for distribution of it, there will be properly and misery for multisudes through all time; for it can a arce'y be supposed that the maxims of pridence and self-restraint, through which alone this hard law may be defented, will ever chain general observance among men.

law of Malthus, though many efforts have been made to pick flaws in its bases, remains nevertheless the fixed, axiomatic belief of the educated world. It is accepted as unde-miable by rearly every writer of repute on economical subjects; and unhapply as we advance from theory to actual observation, there is found too much reason to suppose that pressure of numbers on the means of subsistence must remain the normal condition of humanity, and hat, in consequence, distress or privation in one shape or another must be the habitual lot have part a rebellion against this law, unaccomparised by employment of the means by which alone the riggrs of the law may be abuted. Though most thinkers thus far regard the problem as hopeless, some few suggest that singe in the subtre and complex influences of alnce in the subtle and complex influences of that Ethicial life which we call civilization, we find both in man and in those animals which, for nervous development and intelli-gence, most resemble man, very remarkable and anomalous modifications of feomodity, therefore be process of culture and civilization must diminish fertility and at last destroy its excess. This is the reasoning of Herbert Spencer in his Principles of Biology. As a theory it is attractive, and it must be admitted that there are some indications and, perhaps, precis that appear to support it; but when we apply to it the facts that come under our own observation inany community, and most of all in those communities that are oldest and have reached the highest stages of what we call culture and civilzation-for it is in such communities that most privation and distress prevail—we are little likely to think that it points the way to a solu-of this mighty problem, or enigma, of life. Among the carlous contradictions with which men are lesset in this common field of hard fact and abstruce speculation is the fact that the tendency of cifilization, with its moral growths of benevolent activity to mitigate the rigors of the Darwinka law, gives support in cortain wass to the Malthusian law, and even aggravates its evils. Civilization, as we have on, is antagonistic to the law of "natural sebecton; a strangement to the law of "material selection;" it opposes and beats down the doctrine of "survival of the fittest," by causing mony who are not fittest to survive. Even more, there is a tradechy in civilized society to more, there is a tendency in civilized society to multiply the rica from defective and interior specimens. To many such, that degree of pro-tection and assistance is given which enables them not only to live, but to give to the world a large and more or less defective. Interior and helpless progeny. These whose condition is hopeless have no such thought or motive as prudence; the proper they are, usually, the faster for they multiply; certainly the more reckless they are in reference to multiplication. And here comes in the striking fact that our very humanities become the means not infre-quently of locreasing the numbers of this cives or description. The oppositionness are inexta-ble; the very methods of doing good lead direct-office when Borke and Cavendish were murdered. The lary poveroment evidently means to govern with a strong hand, and yet its own friends cencede that the grievances of Troland, as stated by Gladstone, have not been exaggarated. Gen. Buller, who was sent by the government to Kerry, has, through his subordinates, both millions and police, declined to furnish armed assistance to the cheriff in executing write of ejectment, unless he was satished that the tenant was really solvent—that is, that the non-payment of the cent was due to unwillingness and not impolify. That is, Gen. Buller as ly to it creese of evils.

The subject is an immonse one, and only a few of its leading points can be touched with-out writing a book upon it. The present object is merely to point out the fact that man exists under certain laws that press upon him with inexerable rigor; that the pressure of those laws upon him can be madified only by the exercise of intelligence devoted unremittingly to its purposes and objects; that this work must be the work of the individual, each for himself, and that mere numbers, with their crude theories and false philosophies, offer ine solution, but enly encumber the question; that all the effort of the day, looking for relief through socialistic organization, misses the whole problem, and that only through individual comprehension of the main elements of the problem and through individual effort under the guishness of an intelligent judgment can any real advance be made toward solution of it. The business of "getting on in the world" is a very practical thing, and it can only be accomplished by practical affort, ander certain laws that press upon him with inwhen he declined to furnish military and poline aid in turning people out of their houses for non-payment of rent, inless there was good reason for helieving that the tenant was able to pay if he chose. And jet Morley was blitterly denounced by the tory party under Salisbury for doing exactly what their own executive, Gen. Bu her, its doing today. Mr. Stead, the editor of the Pull Mail Gazette, recently returned from Ireland, where he has been making a very careful examination of the situation, interviewing land-ited and tenant, home-ruler and anti-home-ruler. Mr. Stead says to rent question cannot ther. Thr. Stead says the rest question cannot wait. He estimates the losses of the farmers upon all products but hay and potatons, during the ream 1885 and 1885, to be $67,500,000. "If the Irish tennat," concludes Mr. Stead, "were to pay one year's real for the last two years, the fall in prices would wipe out the other year's real and seave him in actual page."

Mr. Stead was this situation, the page and a limit it can only be accomplished by practical affort, each man in his individual way.

A SECOND RATE POWER.

A forcible illustration of the difference be-tween England's powerful influence upon the settlement of the Eastern question fifty years sign and to-day, is found in her interference in ISES to save the rultan of Turkey from subjust then by his revolted vuesal, the celebrated Mc-beaumed All, pashs of Egypt, a man with extraerchary talents for own and administration.
This great man, by the aid of his warlike adopted son, Brahim Fashe, in 1898 conquered all Syria, defeated the armies of the Porte, and all Syria, defeated the armies or the Forte, and the life defeated the Turkish army so fearfully by Justin McCarthy in a recent least when he had Constantinopie was only saved, and the said "that a people marked out as definition in the pewers of Europe. ever produced, began to hold his vast public meetings in favor of the "rensal of the Union." which practically meant the remission of Ir-land to the home rule and Irlsh parliament granted to Gratian during England's hour of difficulty with France and her American colo nies, and dissolved by the blood and fraul statements by of William Pitt and his lofamous vicercy Lord Castlerregh, afterwards Murquis of Lendenderry, the ancestor of the present tory vicercy of Irrigad. O'Connell's meetings were held usually on Sonday, and at these vast meetings. O'Conneil addressed the people on the claims of Ireland to, the restoration of her old parlament. He told how Cromwell massacred three hundred of the women of Wexford in cold blood; how Elizabeth treacherously murdered, at a friendly conference and banquet, 300 Irish chiefe. At one of his monster meetings 250,000 people were present and at last the government grew alarmed and the vicercy issued a procla-mation forbidding the meeting appointed for Sunday, October 8, 1843. O'Connell at once declared the orders of the vicercy must be obeyed, and the people at once returned to their homes, and from that moment the great power of the repeal agitation was gone. The gavern-ment killed the repeal movement by forbidding the public meetings, and with O'Connell silent the public meetings, and with O'Connell silent he ceased to be dangerous. The government also then prosecuted O'Connell, just as they now are proceeding against Dillon. O'Connell, himself a devout Catholic, but not, as he always said, a Papist, was tred by a jury composed exclusively of Protestants. He was found guilty and sentenced to a year's imprisonment and a fine of $10,000. An appeal was taken to the house of fords; Lord Brougham, and the law lords to whom it was referred, declared the jurgment illegal, and it was referred and judgment illings, and it was reversed and O'Connell was set at litherty. The lay peers did not vote upon the question, as it was purely a question of judicial appear. With the release of "Councel life" inspair life "home rule" more ment of 1813-'44 died; ("Conneil broke down in success of the tory ministry of Peei in 1863 in stamping out the "Prepeal" or home Tule movement of O'Connell by proclaiming the public meetings and proseenting the incendiary agitalor has persuaded the tory indulates of Salishury to-day to repeat the one principle of Samuel and his followers. The top ministry have also removed Sir Robert Hamilton from the office of nuder secretary for Ireland. Sir Robert Hamilton is a Scotchman of the highest character and capacity, who has spent his life in the public service and belongs to a class of administrative officers that it is the policy of British politics never to disturb so long as they do not become differsive partisans. His offence is described that "haring been consulted by the Gladatone unfairty on the home rule question as an efficier of the Irish administration, long resident in Iublin, and fully acquainted with the whole Irish difficulty, he strongly advocated Mr. Gladatone's policy, and assisted in the preparation of his Irish bitts." His views were shared by all the peers now surviving who have held the place of vicercy of fraction, including Lord Spence, who held the office when Burke and Cavendish were mur-
